SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Introduction

With this notice, we finalize the CCP process for St. Johns NWR. We started the process through a notice in the Federal Register on December 14, 2009 (74 FR 66147). For more about the process, see that notice.

St. Johns NWR is a unit of and administered through the Merritt Island National Wildlife Refuge Complex.

St. Johns NWR was established in August 1971, to provide protection for threatened and endangered species and to enhance native diversity. The refuge contains two units totaling approximately 6,422 acres. The southern or Bee Line Unit occurs about a mile west of Port St. John, Florida, while the northern or State Road 50 Unit occurs about 5 miles to the north, roughly 5 miles west of Titusville, Florida. St. Johns NWR is closed to public use, except for those uses permitted through the special use permit process. St. Johns NWR contains some of the last vestiges of inland salt pan habitat known in Florida—a habitat dominated by cordgrass, but disconnected from tidewaters. Saltwater upwellings, along with periodic fires and floods, maintain this unique habitat, which exists as part of a network of preserves within the Upper St. Johns River Basin, including natural areas managed by the State of Florida and Brevard County.

The refuge was home to the last remaining families of the dusky seaside sparrow (Ammodramus maritimus nigrescens), a species that despite Federal protection and the best efforts of a consortium of partners was declared extinct in 1990. Today, the refuge is home to four federally listed species, including the wood stork (Mycteria americana), the eastern indigo snake (Drymarchon couperi), the crested caracara (Caracara cheriway), and the American alligator (Alligator mississippiensis). As a result of the refuge's importance to resident and migratory birds, seven species of birds have been designated species of management concern, including the black rail (Laterallus jamaicensis) and the eastern meadowlark (Sturnella
